

Twentieth Century Religious Thought: Volume III, Judaism

Focus on modern Jewish theology and philosophy and details Judaism's evolution from the late 19th century by examining printed works and rare documents

This collection includes 100,000 pages of the most important works and primary sources that document the evolution of Judaism from the 1890s-2010s. It contains a curated selection of unpublished primary sources, coupled with key in-copyright or difficult-to-find texts and authors. This module also addresses the specific needs of scholars and students of Judaism and other religions, while broadening the value of the complete Twentieth Century Religious Thought Library.

Content Highlights:

- The Markus Brann Archive: Mordechai Markus Brann (1849–1920) was a leading figure in the Science of Judaism. He taught at the Jewish Theological Seminary in Breslau, was one of the editors of the influential Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judentums, and made intensive efforts to research Jewish history from archival sources. His large research network finds expression in his vast correspondence with hundreds of other researchers, rabbis, and philosophers, which was permanently deposited at the National Library of Israel shortly before World War II and is included in our collection for the first time in its entirety, upon completion.
- Works by Mordecai Kaplan, rabbi, essayist and Jewish educator and the co-founder of Reconstructionist Judaism, including Judaism as a Civilization: Toward a Reconstruction of American-Jewish Life and The Purpose and Meaning of Jewish Existence.
- Works by Jacob Neusner, academic scholar of Judaism and one of the most published authors in history. Some works include: Extra- and Non-Documentary Writing in the Canon of Formative Judaism, Vols. I-III, Judaism and Story: The Evidence of The Fathers According to Rabbi Nathan, and Comparative Hermeneutics of Rabbinic Judaism Vols I-VIII.
